

EAP201: Study and collection of Hakku Patras and other documents among folk communities in Andhra Pradesh

Dr Thirmal Rao Repally, Potti Sreeramulu Telugu University
2008 award - Pilot project
£10,261 for 12 months

This survey gives an in-depth look at the function of Hakku Patras amongst the folk communities of Andhra Pradesh. It gives a brief account of the methodology of the survey and finally lists the artefacts that were discovered.

SURVEY REPORT

Hakku Patras among the performing communities of Andhra Pradesh

1. Introduction

Andhra Pradesh is one of the 21 States of India. It is situated in central India between the rivers Godavari and Krishna. Modern Andhra Pradesh was once belonged to various dynasties in the central India such as Shatavahanas, Ikshvaku, Kakatiyas, Vijayanagara, Bhamanis and Qutub Shahis. Culturally it is considered one of the richest regions, where different arts and crafts were practised by the various artisan communities in rural, tribal and urban areas communities in the cities have richly contributed to its is multi faceted culture.

The state is situated on the south eastern coast of central India. It is India's fourth largest state by area and fifth largest by population. Hyderabad is the capital city of Andhra Pradesh. Andhra Pradesh is called the rice bowl of India. Two major rivers Godavari in north and Krishna in the south are the main water source for cultivation.

Andhra Pradesh is called in Purana as Andhra Pathas or Andhra Desha, The main language of the state is Telugu, spoken by 90% of the population. The inscriptional evidence shows that an early kingdom was established in this region, in 500 BCE at Bhatiprolu, which was the capital city of this kingdom. With the fall of Mauryas, the Shatavahanas established their rule at Dharanikota, it was their capital. Buddhism and Jainism were the popular religions of Andhra around 3rd 5th Century CE.

After the decline of the Shatavahanas in 220 CE Ikshavaku dynasty dominated this region, Pallavas, Vishnukundins, Eastern Chalukyas and Cholas were also ruled in this region. Kakatiya dynasty established their domain in 12th, 13th centuries. They united the Telugus into one region and Warangal was their capital city.

In 1323 Delhi Sultan conquered this region and extended their political hold in south India. Later the Bhamanis of Bidar and Qutub Shahi of Golconda ruled from 14th to 17th centuries. At the end of the 18th it was the Asif Jahis of Hyderabad who established new political and cultural patterns. Later Nizam of Hyderabad ceded five of their large territories to the British, which was later on called coastal Andhra and Rayalaseema. In 1948 Nizam's Government became part of the Indian union.

Land :

The State of Andhra Pradesh, was formed as a result of the States Reorganization Act of 1956, the state is situated between 12⁰ - 14' and 19⁰ - 54' Lat N and 76⁰ - 50' and 84⁰ - 50' E Long, with Telugu as the main spoken language. It comprises a total area of 294,700 sq.kms., with 23 districts, divided into three cultural regions, coastal Andhra, Telangana and Rayalasima.

It is irrigated by five main rivers namely Godavari, Krishna, Tungabhadra, Penna and Nagavali, besides a large number of tributaries, rivulets, and lakes like Pulicat and Kolleru. It is endowed with a rich haul of natural resources - high mountain ridges like the Eastern Ghats and a dense forest area. The Eastern Ghats, also known as "Turpu Kanumalu" occupy the whole length and breadth of Andhra Pradesh, about 2000 meters in elevation. To the West of the Eastern Ghats lies the upland plain, a section of which is known as the Deccan plateau. Telangana forms part of the South Deccan plateau. Telugu is the main language of the state. The other languages are Urdu and Hindi; at one time Persian and Sanskrit languages were also in used. Some old documents are found in Persian and Sanskrit scripts. 'Modi' script was also found in manuscript documents. Some Hakku Patras were also found in the neighbouring languages of Tamil, Kannada and Mharati languages.

Andhra Pradesh is an amalgam of many cultures. The art and architecture of this region is a synthesis of many styles. It also developed a vital tradition of painting, sculpture and various crafts as well as many kinds of folk arts, some still survive, among them Yakshagana, Burrakatha, Jangama Kathalu, Hari Kathalu, Chekka Bhajan, Ghanta Natyam, Urumula Natyam.

4. Notes on performing Communities

1) General Folk Performances

This kind of folk performances belong to a low caste category. They are not specific to any particular caste but they are general in nature. These performances are open to any person who wants to share the joy. All communities in the village would participate in this type of performance. There are no caste restrictions for participation. During these performances genealogical myths are narrated. These narratives are bases on heroic legends. These folk performances cater to common interests of the people. The folk performers receive the katnam (gratis) not from the caste people but from the audience, because these performances belong to no particular community but to all the people of a village. So no Hakku Patras are given to them. Some of the most popular narratives which are enacted during the performance are Burrakatha, Sharadakatha, leather puppetry which do not have any caste themes or any glorification of a particular caste but are based on deeds of popular heroic personalities.

2) Particular folk performances

These kind of folk performances are linked to some particular religious groups and associated with some castes. During my research I have discovered that in the caste hierarchy every caste has its own sub-caste. Edgar Thruston called these castes as "Mendicant community", Dr. M.V.T. Raju called them "satellite caste" and some other scholar called them "sustained caste", Prof. P. Subbachary called them "dependant caste". I named them "sub-caste". The main caste is known as patron caste and sub-caste, is called a dependent caste. The patron and sub-caste are associated in an independent relationship, as patron and client. Dependent caste or sub-caste is socially and economically dependant and subservient to its patron caste. One patron caste may have 1 to 7 sub-castes as its dependant castes.

The castes which are known as dependent caste are primarily folk performers. They narrate myths related to the origin of the patron caste. These performances include various legends and caste genealogies (Gotras). These performers essentially are folk bards or folk singers. They hold "mirasi right" (right to perform in a particular region). They have right to go every year to their patrons. The elders of the patron caste or the patron community have to treat them with respect, as their caste "Guru" or "Pujaris". Patrons provide them with food and share other facilities. These folk performers also visit their patrons at the time of birth and death ceremonies, on these occasions they also narrate various ballads and legends. Some of the elders of sub-caste communities are Vaidyas (Medical Practices) treat their patrons with herbal medicines, and take care of their health requirements. They also act as caste priest and perform various religious rituals. The sub-caste communities have their own manuscripts. These manuscripts are records of caste related legends and records of their medicinal practices.

Some of these sub-castes such as Gowdajetti, Dakkali, Patamvaru perform their narrations by showing the pat painting (Patams). These Patams are scrolls measuring 4/6 metres in length and they are painted on cloth. These Patams are prepared by the Nakashi community from Cherial Village, in Warangal. The sub-caste communities use Patams as visual aids for their verbal narrations. The other communities who do not have Patams such as Manda Hechu use Toys (Bommalu). These Bommalu are symbolic sculptural representation of various characters in the popular legends, such as Kattam Raju, who is a very popular hero.

3) Social Hierarchy of dependent or sub-caste

The caste is an essential part of the Indian social system; it is deeply embedded in all Hindu hereditary communities, both in urban and rural areas. It is also found at the lowest social level among the Adivasis (tribals) and Panchamas (untouchables), who are considered as outside the Hindu Varnashrama. C.F. Haimondrof in his book "The Gonds of Andhra Pradesh" (1979) wrote that the caste and sub-caste is very much prevalent among the Gonds. The Gonds who consider themselves as a superior caste have Pradhan as their sub-caste. The Pradhans are the priests and the folk performers of Gonds. The patron caste and sub-caste system is very much prevalent among the more advanced communities in many parts of India. In Gujarat many advance castes have this concept of dependent castes. Bhats in Gujarat and Pradhans in central India are two independent manifestations of this institution. It is more probable that these institutions were developed in the urban feudal society and later passed on to Tribals, and other communities. To my observation all tribal communities in Andhra Pradesh have this hierarchy of patron caste and sub-caste. Names of some sub-castes are given below who have this hierarchy of sub-caste.

29.	Gante Bagavathulu		Bagavatha Performance
30.	Dubblollu	All Castes

Here I cannot say that all the above mentioned communities have Hakku Patras but I am sure that these communities are have written and unwritten rights or permission to perform and sing. They perform various rituals at the time of festivals and on other occasions. They also treat people with herbal medicine. These sub-caste communities still possess medical manuscripts. During my research I came across many scheduled castes who have their own priests (Gurus).

5. What is Hakku Patras

Hakku Patras are a kind of grant or entitlement for certain privileges, accorded by some authority to a person or group of persons, to hold land, enjoy certain rights and to provide some services. In India, awarding such grants are common from ancient times. We are well aware of revenue grants and land grants, given to Brahmins or other high castes but we know very little about the other grant systems prevalent at the lower social structures.

Indian historians, anthropologists and folklorists have so far not noticed much on the grants given to folk performers and artisan communities, at village level. These grants are known as Hakku Patras. Hakku Patras are letters of entitlements for folk performances. The Hakku Patras are a kind of documents of grant or Sanad, which permits the folk performers to perform in a pre-assigned regions called “Patti” in perpetuity. Hakku Patras are found in the form of copper plates (Ragi Rekula) and Paper scrolls (Chuttalu) and paper documents (Sanad). These documents are historical records which contain detail information about the various communities, their names and their villages and it provides a rare insight into the nature of folk performances and the inter-relationship among the village communities. Hakku Patras are found among many other folk performing communities in Andhra Pradesh. The Hakku Patras usually inscribed on metal sheets and also written on hand made paper in the form of scrolls. Hakku Patras are considered as a community grants and still accepted by the members of patron communities. It is a wonder, how inspite of so many social changes and economic up-heavels, that the tradition of folk performances is still regularly organized and very much vibrant.

6. About the Project

The pilot project, deals with the study and collection of Hakku Patras found in the possession of nomadic and non-nomadic performing communities. This pilot project is important and a unique study in the context of performing communities, no such study has ever been undertaken in India. This project is the first of its kind. The study highlights many aspects of socio-cultural life of dependent communities and may reveal unknown aspects of their life. These dependent communities are not specific to Andhra Pradesh, such communities may existing all over India (may not have Hakku Patras). The socio-political changes in the recent past, have thrown new challenges for the survival of these people and endangered their documents and visual art materials related to their performance. Now, these communities are threatened by the flux of film and video culture and as well as the invasion of television and electronic media. Once these performing communities were an essential part of the socio-cultural rural environment but now they may not survive another generation. The proposed survey has opened many possibilities, there was an intense interaction between the principal investigator and people of dependent caste and performing communities, who have provided uncommon glimpses into unknown patterns of rural life, their allotted duties, and the services they provide. In rural society every one is allotted certain privileges and rights. All performing communities are given certain rights to perform in the fairs and festivals organized within the village and beyond, called patti, their presence at the birth, marriage and death ceremonies is inevitable.

The main purpose of the pilot project is to study the nature and function of Hakku Patras. To locate the folk performing communities, to find out which particular region (patti) they belong to, and which Hakku Patra they have obtained. The documents of rights are important for the study of socio-economic conditions, and recent changes among the village communities, particularly among the folk performing communities. These communities are nomadic or semi nomadic, going to various villages in the allotted regions to perform folk dramas and recite folk ballads.

The aim of this survey is to discover Hakku Patra, the document of Right, among various folk performing communities and gather information by collecting paper documents and copper plate Hakku Patras. It is important to have dialogues with folk communities and gather information about the nature and function of these documents in detail. These neglected and archival documents contain hidden vital facts about the castes, folk arts, folk narratives, cultural rights and social patronage in a rural milieu. The survey throws new light on these village communities, which will be of great help to the academicians and scholars working on these communities, before they disappear and vanish due to sheer neglect and ravages of time.

7. Details of the Survey Methodology

The Survey / Research began from 1 September 2008 with the appointments of qualified surveyors, necessary for the completion of the project.

The appointed staff was trained by conducting seminars, lectures and interacting with experts from folklore, anthropology and sociology disciplines. The trainees were also introduced to village priests, folk performers and village gurus to acquaint them with the rural environment. They were also introduced to dependent communities and their patrons. The workshop was organized from 12th-13th September 2008.

The trainees were instructed about the survey's requirements and they were acquainted with the methodology of the survey for gathering relevant information in the field study. A comprehensive questionnaire was prepared to obtain required information from the largely illiterate folk performers. Tentative lists were also prepared indicating the names of the folk performing communities, their possible locations, the language of the inscriptions and the nature of Hakku Patra materials.

Detailed tour maps were prepared of all the four cultural regions and the neighbouring states, indicating districts, mandals and possible locations of the performing communities.

The survey began soon after the completion of the training of the selected staff. In the first phase, a team consisting of four survey members went to pre-selected locales and gathered detailed information, as mentioned in the questionnaire. The surveyors also photographed the discovered copper plate or paper Hakku Patras. The principal investigator visited the location for verification of the collected data by research scholars and surveyors.

The principal investigator visited many locations in the four cultural regions with research scholars and surveyors to: verify, review and scrutinized the materials discovered in the field work.

The principal investigator sorted out the various problems related to identification of Hakku Patras that surfaced during the field work. He also interacted with owners of the Hakku Patras. The principal investigator visited many locations in the neighbouring state of Karnataka, Tamilnadu, Maharashtra and Chhatisgarh for obtaining information regarding Hakku Patras.

1) Field work Plan

The field work began from October 2008 and continued up to August 2009. During this period the survey / research scholars and surveyors team visited more than a thousand villages and identified one hundred performing communities who had Hakku patras with them. The area visited by the research scholars and surveyors covered four hundred villages in Telangana, two hundred fifty villages in Rayalaseema and two hundred villages in Coasta region and one hundred fifty villages in Kalinga region. The mode of travel was generally by cars or a van.

The survey team also visited neighbouring states to identify and collect information. During these visits, the team covered one hundred villages and contacted six performing communities in Tamilnadu, Seven performing communities in Karnataka, Five in Maharashtra and four in Chhatisgarh.

2) Problems in Field Work

I have encountered many problems for locating the Hakku Patras and other documents. During the field work.

- (a) This is a new kind of research, looking at the lowest levels of the caste hierarchy, so far no one has ventured into this area. During the field work we met performing communities who are illiterate and reluctant to show their Hakku Patra and other documents.

- (b) The copper plate inscriptions are unique documents. The owners do not want to show them to others. Though the right to own these documents is entrusted to a single person, ownership is claimed by many and sometimes there are family disputes.

It is very difficult to locate these performing communities when they are on tour, they do not carry these documents with them. The nomadic practice of performing communities creates many problems in locating their whereabouts. Some times we have to wait till they returned to their village.

- (c) The copper plate documents are closely written. They could be observed only in day light. Even photographing these documents depends on the availability of perfect day light.
- (d) Sometimes the performing communities ritually display their copper plate or paper document at the place of their performance. We have to wait for the entire day to have access to these documents, at the end of the show, it may be night, when all day light has gone.
- (e) Many times the owners are reluctant to show the Hakku Patra. Either they expect some money or honorarium or we have to convince them about the importance of the research. These small problems take a lot of time and require patience. Sometimes we have to return without any information and wait for some other time and place.
- (f) During the survey I have travelled along with my research scholars and surveyors in search of Hakku Patras and spent more money and time which was beyond the estimation we had planned.

3) Gathering information from other sources

We have gathered information about Hakku Patras from three different sources

- I. Oral Sources
- II. Written Sources
- III. Archival Sources

Detail information about these sources is expanded below.

I. Oral Sources

Hakku Patras are available with folk performing communities in the rural areas of Andhra Pradesh and elsewhere.

We began by gathering oral information from the informants who know about the performing communities and prepared lists about their location. In the second phase we have ascertained whether these communities belong to the old traditional families or not. Not every one from the performing community possessed Hakku Patras, only the elder of a community may have the copper plate. We searched for names of the owner of Hakku Patra and his village or a native place. If he was not available in the village we tried to search for him

In the third phase we followed him wherever he was staying or visiting. Most of the performers usually stayed outside the village in temporary huts or tents. In the leisure time they go hunting, birds and rabbits or grazing their cattles and sheeps. The surveyors waited till they returned in the evening and gathered relevant information.

The patron-class also gave some information about the performers, his name and his village. The major problem was to locate the elders, who had the right information. Many times these elders, though in possession of relevant information were reluctant to reveal it. With meager information sometimes we were able to search and locate the documents.

II. Written sources

Fortunately I could find out some published books, dissertations and reports, which have referred to these performer communities. The scholars who have done research in this field also provided some relevant information.

Although the written sources provided very scant information about these performing communities, it was still very important. The books which deal with the sub-caste people have mentioned the performing communities, but this information is devoid of reference to any Hakku Patras. These books or booklets are not easy to locate in well known libraries. Personally I have tried to seek such information in the local libraries.

III. Archival Sources

There are some metal Mudras or Copper Plates which have inscriptional information related to performing communities and are kept in museums. However the curators are not aware about the content of these artifacts. I found one such Mudra in the Tirumala Museum, other Mudras from Egmore Museum, Chennai. Two copper plates found in the manuscripts wing of Kannada University, Hampi, Karnataka.

8. Condition of the Hakku Patras

The period of Hakku Patras, which we have discovered both on copper plate and paper, generally are dated from four hundred to fifty years old. It is difficult to ascertain exact dates of these documents, the textural evidence within the documents help us to calculate an approximate date by identifying and locating the person or persons mentioned in these documents. Confusion is created due to variation in the use of calendars by the scribes of these documents. Some documents mention the Saka Calendar, some Higrī or Fasli eras, some used Telugu year names. To find out the correct dates of these documents, we have to refer to the almanacs or take some expert's opinion. Few copper plate documents mention Telugu year names of recent periods which may mislead us. We have to see the condition of both the copper plate and paper documents to know the proper date of these documents.

Whenever the documents have official seals or issued by some official authority, we can, with certainty, derive correct dates of these documents. For example if the documents are issued in Qutub Shahi period, Asif Jahi period or British period, we can easily guess the approximate date of these documents.

The oral information given by the owners does not help us to arrive at the exact date of these documents, because the owners usually count the date by generations. There is no exact date from one generation to another. They say that this document was prepared before my grandfather or great-grandfather.

Any how we have prepared a tentative list of approximate period. The research scholars and field surveyors could gather exact period of these documents. We have taken the help of experts, such as people who can read the text, or have knowledge in anthropological field work, an epigraphist, and expert in metallurgy and expert in deciphering the text, to arrive at the dates of document mentioned in the lists.

The condition of all the copper plates is the same. Some of documents are much used so they appear old and others are less used, they appear new.

9. Photographing the Hakku Patras

The main goal of the project is to survey and locate the Hakku Patras, to achieve this goal we had selected surveyors, keeping in view their background and their dedication. Out of the three surveyors, the first person we selected was Mr. Anjaiah, he belongs to a folk performing community, though he does not know how to operate a camera. But he knows a lot about his own communities. He is an insider. In the survey he had been an asset to the project and helped us in locating Hakku Patras.

The second surveyor we selected was Mr. Mettu Venkat Narayana, he is educated and a member of a performing community. He knows photography and took the photographs.

The third selected surveyor was P.J.V. Sridhar who has good knowledge of photography and is an art student but knows less about the rural areas.

Apart from these three main surveyors, I sought help of other photographers that is why there was a duplication of works and visits. There was a constant demand from EAP for the improvement in the quality of photographs. If the quality of the photographs is not up to the mark, the photographer had to visit the same place, once again. We have not compromised with the quality. Many of the photographs were taken in the available sun light and in difficult situations. If a major research project is granted to us we will arrange a mobile photo-unit to fulfill the EAP's standard.

It was very difficult in the preliminarily survey to concentrate on the survey, and the quality of the photographs. I realized that many of the photographs of the documents taken were not good but they serve the purpose as evidence. The preliminary survey has dealt mainly, with the location of Hakku Patras. All the photographs sent to EAP with the list are infact evidence for the existence of Hakku Patra.

10. Copyright

Traditionally all the rights are granted by the king, Jagirdar or head of the religious institutions to the head of folk communities and their Guru. These rights are allotted to only two to four families in the entire folk communities.

If a dispute exists among two brothers in a single family regarding the sharing of the right to perform in a region (patties) they have also documents of agreement for divided rights. The division in the families also leads to dividing the rights among family members. They may practically use these rights, orally but the possession of Hakku Patras is important. Few owners have lost their rights as they could not perform their duties. Some have lost the rights because they lost their documental evidences. Others purchased these documents to have the right to receive the honorariums. Very few mortgaged the copper plates at the pawn brokers. So it is not practically possible to take the copyright of the Hakku Patras from the performers.

Folk documents do not belong to a single owner. Whoever possesses the documents is considered the owner / possessor. Sometimes the documents are owned by different communities. It is difficult to establish the ownership right to one particular person, a family or a community. The documents are owned by the entire community but remained in the possession of one person within the community. Those who are willing to show their documents, we can take their consent to copy. This is a usual practice of the folk researchers and field workers that they never insist the owner to part with the documents. If the owner is reluctant to permit the photocopying of the document we have pursued the local people or close relatives to seek the owner's consent. Consequently, the photographs will become the property of Survey / Research Project. Generally, no question arises of copyright and property right. In this regard if the original are intact and remained with the owners. The photocopies of the documents will be used for research purposes. It will be explained to the owners that the copies of the documents, will be used only for academic and research purpose.

We have to assume that those owners who have given their consent to photograph Hakku Patras and paper documents, have also permitted the scholars and academicians to use these documents for research purpose.

11. Number of families contacted

During the survey, we have visited many villages and met people belonging to performing communities and made enquiries about the persons who have Hakku Patras, they invariably asked us to contact someone else inside the village or outside the village, who had these documents. Their instructions we have followed and discovered the families of performing communities who actually possessed the Hakku Patras, in the Indian village some names are very common and number of people carried the same name. To hunt the right person and right family was a difficult task. During the survey we talked to thousands of families in various villages. This gave an opportunity to interact and contact two hundred and forty four families who actually had Hakku Patras with them.

12. How Many Hakku Patras located in each Village

This is a detailed list of the Hakku Patras located in each village during our survey. We have visited more than one thousand one hundred sixty villages and discovered nearly two hundred and forty four Hakku Patras.

I am also providing information along with Hakku Patras and other related documents which may be very important. The importance of these related documents we can only know when the inscriptions in the copper plates and paper documents are deciphered and the content known.
